Mrs. Noel Hartley-who, as May Laffan, wrote the brilliant Irish novel, "Hogan, M. P."—is about to pub-lish a new story entitled "Ismay's Children." If as good as her former book it will be a welcome addition to the movels of the year. In "Hogan, M. P." is to be found the only vivid picture we have of modern life and society

A letter written by John Wesley while travelling in Ireland was lately sold in London. In it he says: "For natural Sweetness of Temper, for Courtesy and Hospitality, I have never seen any people like the Irish. Indeed all I converse with are only English transplanted into another Soil. And they are mended by the Removal, having left all their Roughness and Surliness behind them. They receive the Word of God with all Gladness and Readiness of Mind. The Danger is that it should not take deep root, that it should be as Seed fallshould not take deep root, that it should be as Seed fall-ing on stoney ground. But is there not the same danger in England? Do not you find it so in Londont"

Mr. A. Bronson Alcott can no longer hold a pen and in revising his diaries, dictates his changes. He is spending the summer with his daughter at Melrose.

M. Petros Papageorgiu, a Greek scholar living in Philippepolis, has discovered an ancient manuscript, containing passages of Aristotle's works. The manu-acript is believed to be of the fourteenth century, fand consists of 180 pages. The manuscript is in excellent preservation, the veillum being clean and strong, and all the letters being perfectly legible. It bears marginal annotations which are probably of the fifteenth century. M. Papageorgiu is now comparing the manuscripts with existing editions of Aristotle's works, and he finds that the text differs in many important passages from these editions, and notably from Didot's, which is in general use on the Continent.

EMr. Clark Russell's new novel has the highly exciting

Mrs. Alice Williams Brotherton's poems-which have appeared in various English and American magazines— have been collected and published in a neat volume by C. H. Kerr & Co., of Chicago.

"The Physical Proportions of the Typical Man" is the title of the paper which Professor Sargent has prepared for the July Scribner. The standard he gives is based on the measurements of ten thousand individuals.

The French have been seized by the craze for biographfeal series. A number of volumes bearing the general title of "Les Grands Ecrivains Francais" are in course of preparation. The books will resemble in character the series of "English Men of Letters." M. Taine will deal with Sainte-Beuve; M. Paul Bourget will write upon Balzac; M. Leon Say has chosen Turgot; and Victor Cousin will be the subject of Jules Simon's book.

The mention of the English series reminds us that Mr. Bidney Colvin's "Keats" is announced for immediate Bidney Colvin's "Keats" is announced for immediate publication.

Andrew Lang, in the course of his clever paper on "Literary Plag arism" in "The Contemporary Review," tells these stories:

A novelist once visited the writer in high spirits. Certain events of a most extraordinary nature had just occurred to him, events which would appear incredible it I ventured to narrate them. My visitor meant to make them the subject of a story, which he sketched. "But you can't," I said; "that's the plot of 'Ferdinand's Folly," and I named a book which had just arrived sub lumins oras. He had not heard of "Ferdinand's Folly," but he went away sad, for he was a young man that had been robbed of a great opportunity. But he was presently consoled by receiving a letter from another author, a gentleman of repute in more than one branch of literature. "I have just read your 'Daisy's Dream," said this author, "and I find that there is a scene in it which is also in my unpublished work, "Psamathee." He then described the scene, which certainly did appear of glaring originality—it anything could be original. "Nobody will believe two people could have invented this; but what am I to do i" said the second unfortunate author; and indeed, I do not know what he did, or whether "Psamathee" was punished by an early doom for her unconscious plagiatism. The study of the diffusion of popular tales seems to show that there is no incident which may not be invented over and over again—in Siberia or Samoa. These coincidences will also occur in civilized literature; but some examples are so astonishing that the small try of moralists are certain to shout "Stop thie!." On the whole, an author thus anticipated had better stop before they shout, but it was the merest accident that gave pause to the two novelists of these anecdotes. Alse! unconscious of their doom, the little victims might have published.

Another very hard case lately came under my notice. A novelist invented and described to me a Alse! unconscious of their doom, the little victims might have published.

Another very hard case lately came under my notice. A novelist invented and described to me a situation which was emphatically new, because it rested on the existence of a certain scientific instrument, which was new also. The author was maturing the plot when he enanced to read a review of some new work (I never saw it, and have forgotten its name), in which the incident and the instrument appeared. Now, may this author write his own tale, or may he not? If he does (and if it succeeds), he will be hailed as an abandoned rogue; and ye it is his own invention. Probably it is wiser to "endure and abstain"; otherwise, the "lynx-eyed detectives" will bring out their old learning, and we shall be told once more how Ben Jonson stole "Drink to me only with thine eyes. from-Pisistratus! This I lately learned from a newspaper.
